A VISIT TO ENGLAND.

Barsat of a letter from our of the propriemer of the S Y. Baky Adventure, shared London, May 6th, 1975.

Liverpool is a beautiful town. The docks are wanderful indeed, particularly the new dock. The approach to Liverpool is hazardous in the extreme. They want the bay of New-York. The exchange in thu town surpasses that of any in Europe. What automished me must was the immense size of the cart horses, their carts, and the loads they draw.—The cart litelf, I think, weighs more than a New-York cart, horse, bad, of sugar and the cartman in the bargain; and on one of these panderous vehicles I counted twenty-six bales of cotton, drawn by two horses with great case. The people look very much like New-Yorkers, and are quite sociable. Their living is twice the price of living in New-York, and what I hate above all things is, after having paid the landlord double fare, one is obliged to pay the servants—fur transient persons the rails on nine-pence a day for the head waiter, ulx-posce a day for the transient persons the rails on nine-pence a day for buots so he is termed. Then comes the coaches—the fare autable from Liverpool to Burmingham is one pound two—then comes the guard, he must have his shilling for such a distance, and the coachman must have his—if the guards or conchance are shallowed, you must pay the new ones. Bervands pay theirmasters large sums of money, is some cases, to vait upon gentlemen in the paties houses, and they must be remanurated by passengers. Coachmen, and ell indeed little and in the first manifest houses, and they must be remanurated by passengers. Coachmen, and ell indeed little and in the southful eity. dead use is begind to the colleges, and is a beautiful city. The colleges, a of adiab every besit in the thirteenth my, been rather as old leads—some had supplied and furnitured by the bed furnitured in the highest degree. Indeed, as the beautiful are constanted as ever the city, is the pre-constanted as ever the city, is flowers, which are to be seen in every window, as well as in their gardens—and then, too, the smiling and healthy counternances of the cottager and his family, with cheeks as red as the rose, and eyes as bright as a new sovereign—one has little time for any thing but admiration at such accres as these. England was never so prosperous as at the present moment, and the most perfect good will, and must friendly feeling exists towards America. The people speak of our country with admiration, and so far I have found them agreeable and sociable to such a degree, that a blush is constantly put upon American manners.

I was not very much surprised at any thing I had seen until I had reached London. I entered this world of a metropolis at Hyde Park corner, the fashionable and west end of the town. To describe to you my feelings I cannot. It was at the moment all the fashionable and nobles and gently were is motion. It appeared to me that what I saw was magic—that the whole world had met in a single street—thousands of carriages, with servants in aplendid gold and silver livery, elegantly dressed with white costs, red plush breeches, buckles in their shees, onched hats laced with gold and silver, two servants behind a carriage, with staffs in their hands—then the heautful horses and the glittering harnesses—these carriages were coming from the various streets towards the main street, and sidd to these a thousand vehicles of different descriptions, men on horse-back, and the great mass of four passengers—my conscience, what did I expert but that every moment a tremendous rush men on horsebuck, and the great mass of foot passengers—my conscience! what did I expect but that every moment a tremendous rush would be male, and horses, carriages and people all be dashed to atoma—yet they pas-sed each other like magic, without apparently a touch, although the space through which a carriage would pass, or a heavy waggon with six horses tandem, appeared to be not half large enough for a wheelbarrow.

To the Quarterly and Monthly Meetings of Friends, Great Britain, Ireland, or cheen here, Doar Friends, We have sensibly felt the loss of some of our dear and honoused friends, whose labor in the work of the Lord have in former year heen blessed to this inceting; and who have long been examples to the flock by the lau mility and picty of their lives. But through the morey of the Most High, we have been the mercy of the Most High, we have been strengthened in the humbling persuasion, that in his unfailing goodnes, he is still continuing to bless us, and that he has condescended to be near us in this our annual assembly. In the fellowship of the Gospel, we therefore again salute you, our endeared brethren and sisters, wherever situated; desiring that amongst you, and in all the families of the carth, the love of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, way increase and abound exceedingly.

May our elder brethren and sisters, who have passed and are passing through many

May our chart have passing through many tribulations and conflicts, continue to trust in the Lord; in the full belief that as they perthe Lord, in the full belief that as they per-severe unto the end, exercises for the salva-tion of their own souls, and for the prosperity of the church, will through the mediation of our Redecmer, be rewarded with a glorious immortality. And we exhort those who are in the meredian of life, whose time and talents ought to be devoted to the service of the Trath, to exercise a sound judgment in the fear of the Lord, and to be firm and steadfast in their respective allotments. And as we in their respective allutments. And as we have rejoiced in the belief that many in early life have yielded to the visitations of heavenly love, we do very tenderly entreat these to hold fast, that whereunto they have attained; to wait before the Lord in reverence and humility for further preparation for use-fulness in his service; and with meckness and diffe here are with tend and ficients. and humbly to further preparation for usefulness in his service, and with meckness and diffidence, yet with seal and fidelity, to pursue the path of obedience. And O't that we may all be manifesting our attachment to the genuine, unchangeable principles of the Gopel. An adherence to its doctrines has been the support of our predecessors,—both of those who were the instruments in gathering us to be a distinct religious society, and oil their faithful successors down to the present time. The principles embrace faith in that redemption which comes by Jean Christ whe ever liveth as our intercessor with the Father, and in the immediate teachings of the Holy Spirit.

It is indeed the great duty of every one who professes the name of Christ rightly to estimate these highly important truths. It ought to he his frequent concern, by warchfulness unto prayer, (a duty often enjoined, but which cannot be too deeply impressed,) to imitate the example of our blessed Saviour, and to obey his secred precepts. If thus concerned, he will be annoted to an house exception, the will be annoted to an house exception.

among men, may tend to diminish the excellence of that standard in the view of those with whom he associates.

He that is concerned to support the character of a follower of Christ, and who amongst us would disclaim this character? ought to be carnest in his endeavour that accessions of wealth do not in any way disqualify him for the discharge of every duty. Those who, whilst honestly and differently endeavouring to provide for their families, have to encounter many difficulties, have a strong claim on the sympathy of their friends, yet they need not fear, as they continue to place their whole trust in our Heavenly Father, but that he will care for them in such a way as he sees meet, that if any, whether of the more affluent, or of those who cannot be ranked as this class, are devisting from safe and regular methods of business, if they are carried away by uncertain and hazardous, through plausible ache mos for getting rich, if they yield to a deaire rapidly to enlarge their possessions—such are in imminent danger. They cannot justly expect the blessing of the Most High an such pursuits, their spiritual cye becomes din; and they do not perceive with clearness of that light which would enable them to perfect holiness in the fear of God. And we believe that if there were a due attention to this light, there would be a larger proportion of our members qualified to fill the stations of Elders and Overseers be a larger proportion of our members quali-fied to fill the stations of Elders and Overseers amongst us. When the duties of these offices are faithfully disclarged, it greatly tends to the editication of the body in love. How beautiful and how safe would be our condi-

The practice of frequent retirement in spirit greatly assists us on our way to the kingdom of heaven. If an impartial review of our conduct then takes place, and if the sineere and secret pe tition is raised for Almighty help, we are led from an undue attachment to the things of this life, and our tachment to the things of this life, and our tachment to the things of this life, and our tachment to the things of this life, and our tachment to the things of this life, and our tachment to the Bible are often at such times trought to reme subrance with consolution and strength. It is one among the many evidences of the divine authority of Holy Scripture, that, in the various ages of the Chrisdences of the divine authority of Holy Scrip-ture, that, in the various ages of the Chris-tian clurch, its valuable contents have pro-duced in true believers an harmonizing score of their bleased effects. If, in humility, and of their blessed effects. It, in nummy, and in reliance upon the spirit, which gave them forth, we are diligent in reading these sacred writings, we become increasingly sensible of their value, we are then prepared, from our own experience, to say that they are able truth of the position; that in order to the ac-complishment of this great end they need no human comment; and we are anxious that our fellow-men, in every region of the globe, may possess and may be able to read the vo

As it is the natural effect of obedience to the love of Christ revealed in the heart, to enlarge our love to others, the more we are brought under the influence of this principle, the more we shall be prepared to employ a portion of our time and of our substance, in portion of our time and of our substance, in promoting the temporal and spiritual welfar-of mankind. We therefore desire that a disposition for active benevolence may be cherished in every heart; each being con-cerned to know for himself, in what way of others, and steadily to persevere in he may have rightly undertaken; with a conmith a view to popularity or estentation, but simply as acting the part of a wise and fasti-ful servant who must give an account to his I could be seen in a contract to his Lord at his coming.

No subject of this description has more interested our feelings, from year to year, than the continuance of the Slave trade and the degraded condition of those who are kept in bondage. In the course of our pre-sent deliberations, the cruelties of this hor-rid system of injustice have afresh called forth our deep commiscration; and we car-nestly desire, notwithstanding the slow pro-gress that is made in the great cause, that no discouragement may prevail, but rather that all may be incited to labor with greater zeal for the utter abolition of the Slave trade and of Slavery.

and of Slavery.

The importance of rightly training the youthful mind in very early life, has again claimed our scrious attention, and we cannot better convey our present concern than by reviving the following pertinent counsel:

"We tenderly, affectionately, yet earneatly, entreat such as are parents, or have the care of children, that they be very early and firm endeavoring to habituate them to a due. but which cannot be too deeply impressed, to imitate the example of our bleased Saviour, and to obey his sacred procepts. If thus concerned, he will be anxious by an honest examination to ascertain, whether by a daily course of Sch-denish, he is evincing his sense of the marvellous love displayed by the coming in the firsh, and as a scrifice for sin, of the Son of God, who is "the light of the world." (Joan visc. 12.)

We are persuaded, beloved friends, that if these ordening mind beloved friends, that if these ordenin mabjects have their due place in the mind, you will become fearful leat the love of the world should disposses you of the love of the world should disposses you of the love of God. In this day of comparative outward case, and of examption from great suffering, in the support of our views of the pure and spiritual nature of the gospot, it especially behaves us to be on use guard that we be not gradually drawm saids from the simplicity of the Truth as it is in Jesus. It is upon this principle of simplicity that car testimenty to plain uses in queech, behaviour and appured, restand, behaviour and appured, restand, behaviour as we do, that nothing ought to be encoured intitle that forms a part of our Christian dory, we would enheet all our members, including the charges of destraints, have amounted to up-ward of the considerable to be encoured into the forms a part of our charges of destraints, have amounted to up-wards of twelve thousand since branches to be acceptable, they have been lineared in Jupport of our Christian dory, we would enheet all our members, including the charges of destraints, have amounted to up-wards of twelve thousand since branches, they have been lineared in Jupport of our Christian deeps, we would enhert all our members, including the charges of destraints, have amounted to up-wards of twelve thousand since branches, they have been incurred in Jupport of our Christian deeps to the case of the cross it is a support of our charges of destraints have been incurred in Jupport of "The seven pirates and four fishermen, as before, now proceeded with us towards the heach, until the water was about those feet deep, when they all got out; the two fishermen to each canoe, hauling us along, and the pirates walking by the side of us, one to each of our crew, torturing us all the way by drawing their knives across our throats, grasping the same, and pushing us back under the water which had been taken in by rocking the canoes. While some of us were in the most humiliating manner, beseeching of them to spare our lives, and others, with uplifted eyes, were again supplicating that Divine mercy spare our lives, and others, with uplifted eyes, were sgain supplicating that Divine mercy which preserved them from the fury of the elements, they were singing and laughing, and occasionally telling us in broken English, that 'Americans were very good beet for their knives.' Thus they proceeded with us nearly a mile from the vessel, which we were now losing sight of by doubthing a point at the entrance of the cove before described; and when within a few rods of its head, where we had before seen the kuman bones, the canoes were hauled abreast of each other, from 12 to 20 feet apart, preparatory to our execution.

to 20 feet apart, preparatory to our execution.

The stillness of death was now around us—for the very flood-gates of feeling had been burst anunder, and exhausted grief at its fountain. It was a beautiful moraing—not a cloud to obscure the rays of the sun—and the clear blue sky presented a scene too pure for ducds of darkness. But the lonely sheet of water, on which, side by side we lay, presented that hopeless prospect which is more ably described by another.

"No friend, no refuge near:
Ah, all is false and treacherous around;
Ail that they touch, or taste, or breathe, is

All that they touch, or taste, or breathe, i Death." We had scarcely possed the last possio look at each other, when the work of deat commenced.

They seized Captain Hilton by the hair—bent his head and shoulders over the gunwale, and I could distinctly hear them chopping the bone of his nock. They then wrung his nock, separated the head from the body by a slight draw of the word, and let it drop into the water—there was a dying shrick—a convolutive struggle—and all I could discern was the arm dangling over the side of the ca-

There was an imploring look in the inno-cent and youthful fact of Mr. Merry, that would have appealed to the heart of any on-but a pirate. As he arease on his knees, is would have appealed to the heart of any one but a pirate. As he arose on his kneez, in the posture of a penitent, supplicating for mercy, even on the verge of eternity—he was prostrated with the blow of the cutlass, his bowels gusined out of the wound. They then pierced him through the breast in several places with a long knife, and cut his throat from car to ear.

places with their knives, and split their heads open with their knives, and split their heads open with their cutlasses. Their dying grouns had scarcely cessed, and I was improving the moment of hie that yet remained, when I heard the blow behind me—the blood and brains that flew all over my head and shoulders, warned me that poor Hussel had should ders, warned me that poor Russel had shared the fate of the others; and as I turned my head to eatch the eye of my executioner, I the late of the others; and as I turned my head to eatch the eye of my executioner, is aw the head of Russell severed in two nearly its whole length, with a single blow of the cutlass, and even without the decency of removing his cap. At the sound of the blow, Manuel, who sat before me, kaped overboard, and four of the Prates were in full chase after him. In what manner he loosed his hands, I am unable to say—his escape, is hall hereafter explain. My eyes were fixed on my supposed executioner, watching the signal of my death—he was on my right to say a bell in sabout to pass the City Councils of the left in the continued prevalence of good health. ed on my supposed executioner, watching the signal of my death—he was on my right and partly behind me—my head, which was covered with a firm tarpaulin hat, was turned covered with a firm tarpatilin hat, was turned in a direction, that brought my shoulders fore and aft the canoe—the blow came—it divided the top of my hat, struck my head so severely as to attin me, and glanced off my left shoulder, taking the akin and some flesh in its way, and divided my pinion cord on the arm. I was so severely stunned that I did not leap from the canoe, but pirched over the left side, and was just arising from the water, not my length from her, as a Pirate three his knife which struck me, but did not retard my flight an instant; and I leaped forward through the water, expecting a blow from behind at every step.

The shricks of the dying had ceased—the scene of horrid butchery in the canoe was now over—Manuel and I were in the water about knee deep—two of the Pirutes after me, and all the rest, with the fishermen, except one Pirate, after Manuel. We ran in different directions.

DEATH BY DRINKING COLD WATER.

The number of deaths in this city, last week, imputed to a too free use of cold water, are oxceedingly melancholy. We are fully persuaded that something more than cold water, however, has an agency in these sudden, and often fattl affections of the amguineous system. So far as our own observations have extended, laboring people, are the most liable to injuries from drinking cold water, when the atmospheric temperature is very high, and the majority of these who have died, have been either granly intemperate; at were strengly inclined to it. There is a mistaken notion pervaining the laboring part of the community, that if the weather is executively ware, it is necessary to take the more spirits. Nothing can be more arrenteed, accomplying the laboring part of the community, that if the weather is executively ware, it is necessary to take the more approximation and the laboring and the source permission. The ball was extracted by Dr. Bissell, of Moscow, and we understand that the man is in a fair way to recover. in a fair way to recover.

Letters from Mexico to March 20, quoted by the London Courier, state, that during the preceding twelve months, there had been coined in the mint of Mexico above 7,010,000, and that in the other provinces, from which no return had been made, the coinage was considerable. It is added, that this fact, combined with other causes, had already had a considerable effect in restoring the equilibrium of the exchange.

INDEPENDENCE OF HAYTL By the Rubecca and Sally, from Port au Prince, arrived at New York, we learn, that on the 4th July, a French fleet, consisting of two ships of the line, 8 frigates, 2 brigs and a schr. anchored abreast of the strongest fort in the anchored abreast of the atrongest fort in the harbor. The fleet brought out an ambassador for the purpose of treating with the Haytien Government, for an equivalent for their independence. The negotiations lasted 5 or 6 days, and resulted as follows: The Haytion government to pay to France 150,000,000 of france, and the French colonies to have the privilege of trading to Hayti for 6 years, by paying half the usual duties.

SQUADRONS IN THE PACIFIC.

The French, English, and Americans, have each a squadron in the Pacific Ocean:—The American, commanded by Commodore Bull, is composed of the United States, 44, Peacock, 18; and Macedonian achr. The British, commanded by Commodore Maling, is composed of the Cambridge, of 80 guas; Briton, 46; Tartar, 42; Mensey, 29; Eclair, 18; and Fly, 18. The French, commanded by Admiral Bosane, is composed of the Maria Theresa frigate, and the Diligents and Lancier corvottes.

The Marquis de Lafayette, when about to take his final leave of this country, in Dec. 1764, after having expended large sums of his private property in its defence, learned, by an extraordinary concurrence of circumstances, unnecessary to be detailed here, the strival of a young Irishman, with whom he isn't for a management of a point of the strival of a young Irishman and the barriage and the his hees driven from his native country by a political persecution produced by an arclest, peritaps and imprudent seal, in defence of that country. The Marquis sent for him, and having ascertained that the persecution he had undergone had left him bare of resources, he, without the least in institution of such intention in the interview, sent him next morning 400 dollars in North America hank notes, in a letter, in which, from motives of deficacy, there was no mention made of the Contents. When the Irishman went to the Marquis' lodgings to tender his gratitude, he found his benefactor had taken his departure for New Jersey, where Congress then sat the found his beneated rad taken his depar-ture for New Jersey, where Congress then sat is it an undue appreciation of hierit, to say this there is probably no other single act of this most exalted and illustrious man's life, chequered as it has been with every species of virtue, which reflects more honor on his character?

The public house at Mauch Chunk, is a large and commodious stone building, three storics high, kept by George Atherton where the traveller may rest assured of finding plenty of good cheer and an obliging landlord and lady. The stabling belonging to the establishment is sefficient for forty, horses.

From the piazza of the tavern is an interesting view of the village, river and surrounding mountains, and also of the various operations connected with an extensive coal business, including the daily passage of the boats through the locks, which are of a very novel and ingenious construction.

The distressing nauses and retching which is common in the summer complaint, we have found to be the most readily overcome by the application of hot and moist peppermint-leaves to the region of the stomach. They are the most conveniently applied, by putting a sufficient quantity of the leaves between two pieces of cloth, then pouring upon them boiling water, and with something provided for the purpose quickly pressing them sufficiently dry, to apply to the region of the stomach as hot as the patient can bear. We have often found this simple remedy to allay the most urgent vomiting, when the stomach rejected opium and sedstive medicines of every description.—Bus. Med. In.

A Remedy for Burns.—A friend informs us, that equal parts of lime water and sweet oil mixed and incorporated will form a kind of map, which makes an excellent application for burns.
